

Dr Eva Nagy

Dr Eva Nagy is an experienced Consultant Breast Surgeon who treats patients in Sydney, and regional NSW. After obtaining her medical degree from the University of Melbourne, Eva worked as a junior doctor in Melbourne and Singapore. She subsequently began formal training in General Surgery in Sydney and completed rotations in various hospitals including Royal North Shore Hospital, St. Vincent's Hospital, and Shoalhaven District Memorial Hospital. Upon completing her training in General Surgery and becoming a Fellow of the Royal Australasian College of Surgeons, Eva embarked on sub-specialty training in Breast Surgery. These two years of training saw her receive comprehensive instruction in advanced surgical techniques relevant to breast cancer at the Poche Centre in North Sydney, and at the Nottingham Breast Institute, a class-leading breast cancer treatment centre in the United Kingdom.

While Eva offers the full suite of surgical options for breast cancer patients, her professional interests include the use of breast-conserving surgery (lumpectomy) for patients where mastectomies are not a necessity, and the use of plastic techniques to help restore appearances after cancer surgery. She is continually mindful of patients' emotional well-being and quality of life when discussing treatment plans, and always ensures that patient health is never compromised. Additionally, through working alongside field-leading oncoplastic specialists during her fellowship training, Eva gained significant expertise in reconstructive techniques for patients with complex situations or who require corrective surgical treatment for prior breast surgery.

Eva's ongoing research in breast cancer has provided her with opportunities to present her findings in conferences such as the San Antonio Breast Cancer Symposium, and the Association of Breast Surgery Conference in Glasgow. Her current research explores the feasibility of safely de-escalating treatment protocols for cancer patients.

In addition to her medical degree (MBBS), Eva has a PhD in Biomedical Science, a Bachelor's Degree (Hons) in Biomedical Science, a Graduate Certificate in Breast Surgery from the University of Sydney, and is a full member of Breast Surgeons of Australia and New Zealand (BreastSurgANZ).
